The temple that the Greeks called the Memnonium in Abydos was actually dedicated to Seti I, deified and located alongside Mut, Mut-Heru, Nehfer, Re-Herakhty, Amun, and Heru. The temple was one of the major architectural sites in that region. It was begun by Seti I and finished by his son, the great Ramses II. In fact, this structure built of fine white limestone is actually one of the most impressive religious structures in Abydos.

The temple was begun by Seti I and finished by his son, the great Ramses II. In fact, this structure built of fine white limestone is actually one of the most impressive religious structures in Abydos.

The temple at Abydos, actually dedicated to Seti I, deified and also one of the most impressive religious structures in Abydos, was begun by Seti I and finished by his son, the great Ramses II. In fact, this structure built of fine white limestone is actually one of the most impressive religious structures in Abydos.

The temple was begun by Seti I and finished by his son, the great Ramses II. In fact, this structure built of fine white limestone is actually one of the most impressive religious structures in Abydos.

The temple at Abydos, actually dedicated to Seti I, deified and also one of the most impressive religious structures in Abydos, was begun by Seti I and finished by his son, the great Ramses II. In fact, this structure built of fine white limestone is actually one of the most impressive religious structures in Abydos.

The temple at Abydos, actually dedicated to Seti I, deified and also one of the most impressive religious structures in Abydos, was begun by Seti I and finished by his son, the great Ramses II. In fact, this structure built of fine white limestone is actually one of the most impressive religious structures in Abydos.

The temple was begun by Seti I and finished by his son, the great Ramses II. In fact, this structure built of fine white limestone is actually one of the most impressive religious structures in Abydos.

The temple at Abydos, actually dedicated to Seti I, deified and also one of the most impressive religious structures in Abydos, was begun by Seti I and finished by his son, the great Ramses II. In fact, this structure built of fine white limestone is actually one of the most impressive religious structures in Abydos.

The temple at Abydos, actually dedicated to Seti I, deified and also one of the most impressive religious structures in Abydos, was begun by Seti I and finished by his son, the great Ramses II. In fact, this structure built of fine white limestone is actually one of the most impressive religious structures in Abydos.

The temple at Abydos, actually dedicated to Seti I, deified and also one of the most impressive religious structures in Abydos, was begun by Seti I and finished by his son, the great Ramses II. In fact, this structure built of fine white limestone is actually one of the most impressive religious structures in Abydos.

The temple at Abydos, actually dedicated to Seti I, deified and also one of the most impressive religious structures in Abydos, was begun by Seti I and finished by his son, the great Ramses II. In fact, this structure built of fine white limestone is actually one of the most impressive religious structures in Abydos.

The temple at Abydos, actually dedicated to Seti I, deified and also one of the most impressive religious structures in Abydos, was begun by Seti I and finished by his son, the great Ramses II. In fact, this structure built of fine white limestone is actually one of the most impressive religious structures in Abydos.

The temple at Abydos, actually dedicated to Seti I, deified and also one of the most impressive religious structures in Abydos, was begun by Seti I and finished by his son, the great Ramses II. In fact, this structure built of fine white limestone is actually one of the most impressive religious structures in Abydos.

The temple at Abydos, actually dedicated to Seti I, deified and also one of the most impressive religious structures in Abydos, was begun by Seti I and finished by his son, the great Ramses II. In fact, this structure built of fine white limestone is actually one of the most impressive religious structures in Abydos.

The temple at Abydos, actually dedicated to Seti I, deified and also one of the most impressive religious structures in Abydos, was begun by Seti I and finished by his son, the great Ramses II. In fact, this structure built of fine white limestone is actually one of the most impressive religious structures in Abydos.